JOB TALK PAPER	The Sovereignty of Personal Jurisdiction , 83 WASH. & LEE L. REV. (forthcoming 2026). Are limits on state courts’ jurisdiction grounded in sovereignty, liberty, or both? The Supreme Court cannot seem to decide, instead frustrating parties by constantly wavering back and forth. By combining insights from political theory with attention to how this doctrine operates in practice, I argue the answer is and should be both—but in a very particular way.

PUBLICATIONS

Hobbes and the Liberal Tradition in International Law, 39 TEMP. INT'L & COMPAR. L.J. (forthcoming 2025) (invited).

Calls to leave Thomas Hobbes in international law's dustbin are understandable given his reputation, but they overlook central elements of his work. In this symposium contribution, I highlight Hobbes as an alternative to the liberal theory that many critical scholars have rejected. His materialism, nominalism, and account of conquest make him a surprisingly likeminded thinker for feminist internationalists, as well as a generative foil.

Procedural Sovereign Distinction, 57 VAND. J. TRANSNAT'L L. 469 (2024).

When U.S. courts apply civil different procedural rules for foreign sovereign and foreign private defendants, one might expect this distinction to coincide with the reason for distinguishing—sovereignty. This often is not the case, however. In this Article, I argue we should at least acknowledge the mismatch, and relevant actors should consider revising procedural rules to promote coherence and justification in U.S. law.

Culpability in Atrocity and the Role of Complicit Observer, 37 TEMP. INT'L & COMPAR. L.J. 11 (2023) (invited).

Atrocity crimes are often associated with an aesthetic of horrific spectacle, the criminal nature of which is deemed intuitively recognizable. This symposium contribution on DeFalco's Invisible Atrocities (2022) argues culpability as imagined by the observer is an overlooked dimension of the "atrocity aesthetic." The sense of our complicity being intolerable, rather than the spectacular, is really what distinguishes the atrocity aesthetic.

WORKS IN PROGRESS
(SELECTED)

Monarchy's Creeping Shadows

Although foreign sovereign immunity under U.S. and international law ostensibly has transformed in the past century, notions from the time of the Founding continue to cast long and warped shadows over today's law. The distorted application of these notions has made a mess, stretching doctrines tailored for monarchs to cover all foreign officials and states. It has also turned unlawful violence into an essential act of sovereignty.

Impossible Commands: On Law, Rights, and Resistance

Having the right to resist certain laws or orders is an essential element of any anti-authoritarian system, but how far does the right extend? In this draft, I examine two early modern theorists' approaches to commands that would require violating human nature. Doing so reveals possibilities for structuring obedience and resistance, and it challenges popular conceptions of familiar authors.
